A LETTER FROM THE OWNER

Welcome to Jacobs Field, home of the Cleveland Indians and Baseball's Best Fans!

It is with great pleasure that I have this first opportunity to talk Indians baseball with you. The Year 2000 promises to be another exciting season of Major League Baseball in Cleveland as we seek our sixth straight American League Central Division title and sixth consecutive appearance in the post season.

My family and I have experienced a lifetime of enjoyment of sports in Cleveland. We believe ownership of the Cleveland Indians is a civic responsibility, and we intend to be accessible.

As we walk the Ballpark and make appearances throughout the community, I look forward to meeting you, getting your input, and gaining an understanding of what makes Indians baseball special for you. Fan satisfaction is our main objective —whether you're sitting in the stands here at Jacobs Field, watching on television, listening on radio, accessing information through our website, or reading the newspaper. Together, we will continue the excitement and success of Indians baseball.

On behalf of the players and the entire front office staff, thank you for your unprecedented support. We look forward to providing you with the very best in sports entertainment.

Sincerely,

*Lawrence J. Dolan
President and Chief Executive Officer*

After a sporadic playing career of only marginal success in the Major Leagues, Manuel went West. Way West. So far West that it was almost East.

And for a six-year period, starting in 1976, Charlie Manuel was an outfielder for the Yakult Swallows and the Kintetsu Buffaloes in Japan.

He was more than just an outfielder, though. More than just a hitter. More than just – dare we say? – a Swallow.

Charlie was more than all that. He was, quite simply, huge. Epic. Legendary. Famous beyond his wildest imagination. Seriously. Not just another “hey, aren’t you?” quasi-celebrity. In Japan, Charlie was the real deal. Mammoth. We’re talking Jordan-like famous.

“I’m not kidding you,” says Manuel, recalling a time when giants roamed the earth—or at least parts of Tokyo and Osaka – and he was one of them, “I couldn’t walk down the street without people running up along side me and touching me. I’d see myself on television and magazine covers all the time. They’d even have me in comic strips, fighting snakes, and stuff like that. Then I’d come back to the States and nobody knew who I was.”

Manuel... “The Man”

With 39 HRs, 103 RBI, and a .312 average, Manuel led the Swallows to their first Central League pennant and Japan Series championship, beating Pacific League Hankyu Braves, four games to three. His home run at a key point in Game 7 helped clinch the Series for Yakult. However, Manuel was traded to the Pacific League Kintetsu Buffaloes during the winter of 1978-1979.

1979

Had a mixed season in which he played only 97 games, missing five weeks with a broken jaw he suffered when hit in the face by a pitch thrown by Lotte Orions pitcher Soroku Yagisawa. However, Manuel still managed a league-leading 37 homers and had 94 RBI with a .324 average. He was named the 1979 Pacific League MVP, as the Buffaloes won the Pacific League title but lost the Japan Series to the Hiroshima Carp.

1980

Enjoyed a career year with personal high statistics of 48 home runs, 128 RBI and a .325 average. Led both Japanese leagues in HRs and RBI and set records for most homers and RBI in a season by a foreign player in Japan (later broken by Randy Bass in 1985). Manuel and the Buffaloes took another Pacific League crown, but lost again to Hiroshima in the Japan Series.

1981

After failure to reach contract agreements with Kintetsu, Manuel returned to the Yakult Swallows but, at 37, it appeared age had caught up with him, and he was unable to perform as in 1977-1980. He managed just 12 homers, 38 RBI and a .260 average, then retired to pursue his career as a coach and manager in North America.
